Abstract

Academic integrity is a vital pedagogical responsibility that educational institutions should explicitly address. One of the best ways to uphold academic integrity is to create a culture of academic integrity throughout the school. This is especially imperative at high schools where students develop their moral identity because students who act dishonestly at high school will likely behave accordingly in post-secondary education and ultimately be dishonest in familial and professional settings. Creating a culture of academic integrity is a challenging, long and multifaceted journey. In this respect, this

Abstract

Academic integrity has been receiving more attention and developing as a field of research. In this chapter, which can be regarded as a reflection of my own academic integrity journey, I have narrated how I reacted to an academic misconduct case and how my reaction took me to a never-ending journey. As the coordinator of “Facing Academic Integrity Threats (FAITH)” Erasmus+ project, I have expressed how as partners of the project we have been collaborating with each other to reach our project goals. I did this by narrating my earlier involvement in academic integrity research. I have also described the historical background of the project by making specific references to the establishment of the European Network for Academic Integrity and Çanakkale Onsekiz Mart

As an Erasmus+ Programme of the European Union project, “Facing Academic Integrity Threats” (FAITH – Project No: 2021-1-TR01-KA220-HED-000027559) is supported by the National Agency of Türkiye and coordinated by Çanakkale Onsekiz Mart University. However, the European Union and the National Agency of Türkiye cannot be held responsible for the opinions expressed in this chapter.

Chapter 7 Avoiding Favouritism in the Recruitment Practice of Turkish Higher Education Institutions

Özgür Çelik  and Salim Razi

Abstract Favouritism is regarded as a widespread phenomenon in the recruitment process and poses a significant threat to competency-based recruitment, resulting in serious problems in research productivity, the quality of education, and the climate of higher education institutions. The aforementioned problems are among the fundamental problems of Turkish higher education, and one of the sources of these problems is favouritism. This study aimed to depict the presence of favouritism in the recruitment practices of Turkish higher education institutions. To do this, we first portrayed the Turkish higher education system and current recruitment practices. Then, we analysed 66 favouritism news stories regarding universities found in the Turkish media online to explore in what ways favouritism occurs. The analysis showed that overly detailed conditions are used as the primary method in recruiting the favoured person in Turkish higher education, with “Specifying the research topics of the favoured person” in the recruitment announcement is the most common particular condition used for favouritism purposes. Also, interviews and written exams are other commonly used methods, especially in the recruitment of lecturers and research assistants. In the end, we proposed suggestions to help mitigate favouritism cases in Turkish higher education.

Chapter 1 Academic Integrity Outreach Efforts – Making Education Accessible and Inclusive

Zeenath Reza Khan , Michael Draper, Sonja Bjelobaba , Salim Razi, and Shiva D. Sivasubramaniam

Abstract Outreach is typically a word used for the corporate sector when looking at their social responsibility. However, when it comes to the academic sector, outreach becomes a compulsory part of everyone's responsibility in order to successfully achieve United Nation's sustainable Goal 4 – quality education. Quality of education comes from ensuring all the stakeholders understand integrity values and make every effort to uphold such values in all aspects of academia and research.

In this chapter, the vertical and the horizontal approaches to academic integrity outreach are discussed. While vertical approaches focus on the national level and/or the same level of education, the horizontal approaches move across such borders engaging different educational levels or nations thus better preparing students for a global market. The chapter provides examples of several good practices of the horizontal efforts done by the European Network for Academic Integrity Outreach Working Group such as workshops, training, and summer school. These activities have provided stakeholders within the global education community to access knowledge and build on skills in academic integrity and writing, to develop an in-depth

Chapter 2 Understanding the Enablers and Barriers of Ethical Guidance and Review for Academic Research

Shiva D. Sivasubramaniam, Zeenath Reza Khan , and Salim Razi

Abstract Well-established ethical guidelines can provide the fundamental scaffolding to improve and enhance research quality. This would allow any researcher to adopt and abide by the guidance with respect for the underlying principles. Therefore, a well-established institutional guidance is important. However, is this “one size fits all” type approach appropriate for all disciplines? In addition, what are the barriers for establishing either institution-wide or subject-specific ethical guidance? Moreover, how can these barriers be transformed into enablers to develop these policies? This chapter attempts to present findings from posing these questions to the attendees (15 in total) of a workshop during the 7th European Academic Integrity and Plagiarism Conference. Therefore, the chapter has been arranged to provide a background literature survey, followed by identifying barriers and enablers of ethical guidance, then presenting critical feedback from the workshop discussions with attendees, with concluding remarks.

Our background literature survey has identified four common themes that might impose both. The themes include (a) organisational, (b) individual/team based, (c) research type related and (d) collaborative influences. Attendees were presented with the results from these themes. A sub-group discussion was then carried out to gather the attendees' experiences/perspectives on enablers/barriers of ethical guidance and ethical approval procedures in their own institutions. The participants also identified several discipline-specific issues in existing ethical guidance and expectations, which are discussed in this chapter. The workshop has provided an opportunity for the participants to appreciate the importance of ethical guidance and the
